Policy Analysts

Policy Analysts provide advice and services to support senior and executive management on a range of related program and policy issues. In consultation with internal and external stakeholders, policy analysts develop, implement and monitor policies, programs, projects and evaluations. The work involves a broad knowledge of relevant acts and programs, government operations and theories and principles. Technical skills involving analysis, research, monitoring, evaluation, contract and/or financial management are applied to effectively and creatively address problems and issues. Policy analysts are required to work cooperatively and collaboratively in a timely and organized way on multiple and often complex problems.

Legislation Officers

Legislation Officer are responsible to coordinate and facilitate the preparation and submission of documents from all areas of the ministry for legislation and regulations (new/ amending/ repealing), orders in council, minister’s orders, cabinet decision items, cabinet information items, nominations, and proclamations. Duties include: responsibility for submissions in response to the Call for Legislation, drafting of documents relating to legislation, cabinet decision-making and implementation. Legislation officers act as ministerial liaisons with Treasury Board, Justice and Executive Council with respect to cabinet documents and procedures. They provide consultative services to ministerial staff on cabinet policy and procedures as well as ministerial authority, legislation and regulations. Legislation officers may be required to prepare information manuals, conduct training sessions and develop administrative guidelines for internal operations related to cabinet documentation.

Research Officers

Research Officers identify data sources, assess the quality and limitations of data and determine whether data are appropriate for use in reports and models. In addition to creating and using models to perform research on a variety of topics, research officers interpret the results of research and communicate those results to others in government or to the public. In addition, research officers answer information requests from members of the public and government on a variety of topics and help people to interpret the data provided.
